The results for the Youth and the State 450 are in and posted in this issue. A big thanks to all who participated and to the winners.

The next MBH scheduled event will be the Indoor held in March. This event will be held once again at the IBH indoor facility in Raytown, Mo. Look for additional information in the January Release and on Facebook. A couple of NFAA events are coming up. The Rushmore Rumble (Jan 5-6 2024) in Yankton, SD and the Midwest Indoor Sectionals to be held in 5 different areas and the NFAA Indoor Nationals (15-17 March, Louisville, KY). The KC Shootout will be Jn 20-21 at the IBH range and the MAA State Indoor will be Feb 10th. A reminder that you must be a member of each organization to compete at these events. As of January NFAA doesn't recognize US Archery membership at their events.

The MBH Board will be excepting bids for the State Outdoor, State 600 and the State 3D at the January Meeting. Also the board will review and awarding scholarship applications at this meeting.

Bill Myers

Merry
Christmas

LARGE & SMALL GAME COMMITTEE

Sweet November!

Early November before the Missouri Rifle Season opener is a magical time in the Missouri deer woods! This past election day, November the 7th was magical for me.

I have hunted several of Missouri's Managed Deer Hunts over the years and I will always apply for a hunt each year. I only get drawn for the hunts I want to do about every 3 or 4 years because I apply for hunts that are in high demand because of the possibility to harvest a mature buck as well as being close to my home in Independence, MO. This year I was drawn for the Burr Oak Woods hunt in Blue Springs. During this hunt I would be able to harvest three deer but only one of them could be an antlered deer. Besides being only 25 minutes from my home the hunt also lasted for the whole month of November, so I had plenty of time to be in the stand. I did my scouting and found some promising sign. My stand was in a tree on an oak ridge about 150 yards off a field edge.

Burr Oak Woods is a very busy place during the nice fall weather with lots of well-groomed trails it gets a lot of use by people out walking to enjoy nature while walking these scenic woodlands. There is also a great Nature Center that attracts lots of residents in the Greater Kansas City area. It also holds several deer in those same woodlands. The deer there are used to seeing and hearing people and are not too afraid if those people are on the trails. They are very wary of anything off the trails and especially if that sound or scent is in their home turf. So even though they may appear to be unafraid of people that walk the trails they are very aware and afraid of bowhunters in treestands! It was a warm morning with a slight SW wind, and I had been watching two does that appeared to be looking at their backtrail when I heard a slight sound over my right shoulder. That turned out to be another doe with a big 8 pointer on her tail. They were only 20 yards away, but I was able to turn and draw my Hoyt compound bow without being noticed. I mouthed a grunt to stop the buck at 13 yards and squeezed the trigger on my release.

At the shot the buck jumped and ran about 30 yards, then buck stopped to look back. I could see the entry wound and it looked good, But the buck seemed to act like he was ok. When he turned, I noticed the exit wound was farther back than I wanted. Looked like one lung and liver hit.

I waited an hour before taking up the trail. After following blood for about 100 yards and not seeing the deer yet I decided to back out and come back a few hours later. That proved to be a smart move. After lunch I was back on the trail. About 75 yards later I found the last blood. After looking a bit more, I found the buck about 20 yards from the last blood spot I had marked. He had laid down next to a tree with a blown down limb and died. So just like you've heard before "when in doubt back out". That extra time I waited to look for that deer allowed him to bed down and expire close enough to the blood trail to find him. If I had continued to pursue him earlier, I believe he would have traveled farther and been much harder if not impossible to find. After filling my buck tag, I continued to hunt several more days in November trying to get those does, but it just never worked out. I had several close calls and seen lots of deer, so I enjoyed it very much, but I was a little frustrated as well. You can bet as long as I'm able to climb a tree and pull my bow back I'll be applying for the MDC Managed Hunts each fall.

If you have had some success this season and want to share it in the Release, just sent me an email at jandkbly@gmail.com

Happy Bow Hunt'in,

Joshua Miller

My heart is beating out of my chest with a cold sweat in 115 degrees.

My bow feels as if it weighs 20 pounds in the hand. I tell myself leave it all on the line as I nock the final arrow of the round. I miss. My heart sinks as I have fallen short of my goal for a gold medal. These were just some of the things I felt in the semifinals in Argentina.

I had qualified for Team USA in June of 2022 for the World Archery 3D Championships that took place in Temi, Italy September of 2022. Being a first time shooter for Team USA I was nervous. But after shooting against some of the world's greatest archers for 2 days I qualified 16th to advance in the shoot offs. Hours prior to the shoot offs, my wife, pregnant at the time, was rushed to the hospital in Temi, Italy where we learned we had lost our baby. We were devastated and the rest of the competition was a blur as I lost my first round of shoot offs. The tournament seemed less important now after our loss. I had no idea of what my future in archery would hold.

As time went on after returning from Italy, a little voice was always reminding me that I didn't leave everything I had on the line there. The tournament consisted of teams from all over the Americas and I was looking forward to some type of personal redemption. After registering for the event I set 2 goals.

The first, to settle for nothing less than gold. The second was to leave everything I had on the course of competition and no matter what happens, leave nothing to chance.

After the practice days came to an end in Argentina, the qualifying rounds started. The competition itself was something a lot of people wouldn't specifically train for. Going from one side of the spectrum of pouring rain, strong winds, and lightning storms to 115 degrees with humidity that took the breath out of your lungs. The red clay of the jungle floor painted my lower body to where it looked as if I was wading in knee deep mud, even slipping and sliding even as I stood before the stake at full draw.

Shooting in these conditions for 2 days can take a toll on the mental and physical side of any archer. I reminded myself before every shot, leave everything you have on the line.

When the final qualifying arrow was scored, I learned I had qualified for 2nd place earning me a bye to the semifinals with my good friend and team mate Shiloh Buffs (1st place qualifier).

I was on track to reach my first goal and I felt great. Everything was clicking as I felt in control and was executing my shot practice range.

My first match in the semifinals was to shoot against the #3 qualifier Guillermo Lopez, a shooter from Argentina. As we approach the first target, a wave of nerves hit me that I never experienced before. I have been in shoot offs before, but this was different, as there were World Archery medals on the line. Unable to shake these nerves, I shot my best through the round. The final arrow was approaching and I was down 3 points. Knowing that I needed a 4 to advance, the nerves got worse, which brings us to where we started.

My heart is beating out of my chest with a cold sweat in 115 degrees. My bow feels as if it weighs 20 pounds in the hand. I tell myself leave it all on the line as I nock the final arrow of the round. I miss. My heart sinks as I have fallen short of my goal for the gold medal.

Losing my first goal was devastating. I felt I had let myself down. But this was the reason I had also set 2 goals. To remind myself that no matter what happens, continue to leave it all on the line rather than dwell on the loss.

I quickly made an additional goal, to settle for nothing less than Bronze.

As I retired for the night, I lay in bed visualizing every target I could possibly imagine and picture myself executing a perfect shot every time. I finally fall asleep at peace with myself and my ability to shoot high pressure arrows, knowing that tomorrow would be full of jitters, nerves and pressure.

The morning arrives and my time in the finals for bronze has come. Standing in front of the cameras, my peers, knowing that this is my last chance to medal starts to get the blood pumping, I calm myself with breathing techniques and remind myself, no matter what happens, leave it all on the line.

As they call our names to approach the first target I have comfort and confidence in myself knowing I didn't get to this position by luck. I say to myself, leave it all on the line and I execute my 3 shots perfectly to win the first target.

At my 3rd target, I get myself ready by repeating in my mind "leave it all on the line". I execute my next 3 arrows to increase the lead going into the 3rd target.

The 3rd target I know that I am halfway home and the nerves are really ramping up. I remind myself again to leave everything on the line and shoot my best shots. I execute my first 2 shots with a yip on the 3rd but remain in the lead heading to the 4th and final target.

The 4th and final target was one of the toughest being 40 meters away on a slight left slope. I approach my final stake reminding myself, leave it on the line no matter what. My first arrow was executed perfectly. With a slight flinch on my second arrow I caught the 2 line. Once again, my bow is heavy, my heart is beating out of my chest, and with a cold sweat, I nock my last arrow. No matter what, I'll leave everything I have on the line.

Time almost stands still as I release my arrow. Upon hitting the target there was a brief moment of silence. I had no idea if I had won or not until I turned around and heard my team mates cheer in joy for me. The sounds lifted one of the heaviest weights off my shoulders as I had just secured bronze for my country.

Argentina was a trip of redemption that I will never forget. I have comfort knowing that I never gave up. I had turned a bad experience into a good one by staying in the moment and embracing the honor of shooting for the United States. I can hold my head high knowing that through all the obstacles of life and all the cards that were dealt, I left everything I had on the line.
